PREFACE

The D scheme of classification represents the present arrangement of the collection of universal and old world history in the Library of Congress. It was first drafted by Mr. Charles Martel, the chief classifier, in 1901 and 1902, but the component schedules were subsequently developed in conjunction with the several classifiers to whom the reclassification of the material in their respective sections was assigned. Mr. W. Dawson Johnston had charge of DA, the first section done; the undersigned, D, DB to DJ, and DQ; Mr. Alexis V. Babine, DK and DR; and Mr. Cecil K. Jones, DP and DT. All the classifiers cooperated to a greater or less extent in the reclassification of the remaining sections, until these, with the exception of DA, gradually came under my general supervision. Upon my resignation in 1906 the work was continued by Mr. J. D. Wolcott, afterwards by Mr. Jacob Lebovitz, later by Mr. George M. Churchill, and, prior to my return to the service in 1913, by Miss Nella J. Martin, each having contributed in some measure to the further development of the several schemes.

As classification means primarily arrangement on the shelves for the purpose of making the literature on a given subject serviceable to him who would consult it, and then the coordination of this literature to related and other material in a logical and practical manner, which calls not only for theoretical knowledge on the part of the classifier but also for his interpretation of practicability and his power to respond to local conditions, thus tending to exhibit his personal inclination, it is evident that where several classifiers have worked on a subject of so many component sections as history, many inequalities will necessarily have developed. Besides, as other sections of the library were reclassified, new problems arose, new relations were established, and consequently new ideas as to grouping and sequence developed. These in turn left their impress on the history schedules then undergoing expansion or revision, and thus in the light of new experience further differences in treatment resulted.

Late in 1913 the present classifier began to readjust such differences as readily lent themselves to this purpose without necessitating too many changes in the shelf list and on the printed cards, until now the scheme has been reduced to as compact and uniform a whole as possible under the circumstances. Certain apparent inequalities, nevertheless, still exist, but these are in the main due to difference of treatment based upon peculiar historical situations and amount of material involved. Where only limited material exists, the classification is naturally not so detailed as in the larger divisions, which in turn occasionally leads to variation in grouping.

In this connection it must be borne in mind, too, that however theoretical the outline may be, the actual arrangement of the books and pamphlets is that of physical sequence on the shelves. At the same time classification is an art as well as a science, and the perfection of form has, accordingly, a legitimate justification. The salient features of an outline should stand out in all possible clearness, details must not obscure essentials, and references to related material should be reduced to a minimum, for it is much more important for the D scheme to show what is classified here than to call attention to what is not. Besides, certain classes of books by reason of their form of treatment belong not with their topic but with the form. For example, however faithful a picture of a war or careful delineation of a ruler it may present, an historical novel belongs as a matter of course in fiction, and special references under every character or event so treated are superfluous.

The philosophy that underlies the classification of history may be briefly outlined. First stands the most universally inclusive literature, subdivided in the more important countries into periodicals and societies, sources and documents, and the collected writings, such as monographs, essays, lectures, etc., of several and individual authors. Upon this follows a grouping of gazetteers, dictionaries, and guidebooks, which leads to the systematic comprehensive treatises comprising both history and description, or works on the topography and geography of a given country. Physical geography, however, is classed in GB.

Now follow the several components of the foregoing, namely, description and travel, social life and customs (including civilization and culture), antiquities, and ethnography and races. In smaller countries these, with the exception of ethnography and races, are often classed together, and in the more primitive countries manners and customs may be grouped with ethnography and races. Literature, however, dealing with social conditions from a sociological point of view is classed in HN, that dealing with the theory of civilization in CB, works on the economic situation in HC, those of a strictly anthropological character in GN, and artistic archeology in N.

Just as a knowledge of the geography of a country is essential to the understanding of its history, so, too, the biographies and memoirs of the men and women who are the chief actors in the daily drama of social, political, and diplomatic life give to history life and warmth, and not infrequently the memoirs of a statesman or court favorite throw more light on an historical situation than do volumes of political theory. Collective biography, accordingly, precedes the general works on the history of a country, while individual biography, including memoirs, recollections, correspondence, etc., is classed with the particular period or reign during which the person in question was especially prominent. Genealogy, however, is classed in CS. It will be observed that the sequence of subdivisions under collective biography is not uniform for all countries. The final form used, for instance, in DL, is an advance over the one first adopted as, for instance, in DD, but because of the mass of material involved, it was deemed inexpedient to strive for absolute uniformity at present, particularly as the change is not of essential significance.

The general works, which in the more important countries are subdivided into those written before 1800 and those since, are as a rule followed by the so-called general special, which might well be termed noncomprehensive, and the minor or pamphlet material of general import. The general literature on the special topics of military, naval, political and diplomatic history comes next, but the more special material is classed with the pertinent period or reign or event, the treatment varying with the individual country. Works on political and constitutional history are, however, classed in J, international law in JX, and military and naval science in U and V.

In the general period divisions there is considerable freedom of treatment, depending now on the amount of literature involved and now on the significance of the historical situation. This obtains also in the individual reigns. For instance, biography and memoirs have in some instances been placed immediately after the sources and documents; in others and more generally in the later schemes, at the extreme end of the pertinent reign or period, where, by reason of their magnitude and miscellaneous character, they constitute a better group than immediately preceding systematic treatises.

At the end of each country division are placed the component provinces and districts, rivers, lakes, mountains, cities, towns, etc. Here is classified everything within the scope of history and description having distinctly local interest. Only when it has a more general bearing does a local event go with the general period or reign, while colonial history as a whole is regularly classed in JV.

Other details have been incorporated in the index, where it is felt that the average user of the scheme will look for guidance, and which has been constructed from the viewpoint that it is an integral part of the scheme of classification.

PREFACE

With reference to the notation it may be stated that its object is location on the shelves. A decimal, therefore, does not necessarily imply subarrangement, for it may have been employed, as in DC 36.9, merely because no whole number happened to be available at that particular place. So, too, .A2 is frequently used to group a given class immediately before another, as, for example, under DC 73, Charlemagne, .A2 stands for sources and documents, whereas general modern works on his life and reign are arranged alphabetically by author, beginning with .A3. A number in parenthesis, as (D 199), indicates that it is to be used for cross reference only, while the material is classed elsewhere.

The history classification is in its general design and in many details the work of Mr. Martel. To Miss Mary W. MacNair the scheme owes its consistency of phraseology, typographical form, and index; and the construction of the scheme throughout has been under the supervision of the chief classifier, Mr. Perley.

PREFACE TO EDITION OF 1921

Sketched in general outlines shortly after the publication of the earlier literature on the European War, the scheme as here presented exhibits expansions and modifications necessitated from time to time as new and unforeseen situations developed and the number of belligerent countries increased. The notation, quite generous as originally assigned, gradually proved inadequate to respond to the demands of logical arrangement, thus leading in several instances to the classification of special topics where considered on merit alone, they may appear to be misplaced. However, the effort throughout the scheme has been to bring related material together whenever feasible and to classify in D whatever literature bears concretely on the war in any of its various aspects. For example, D 511-520 was originally designed only for the causes of the war, but these numbers soon attracted also, because of inseparable association, the general aims and relations of the countries involved, and ultimately the discussion of the probable results as well. Obviously, a conflict thus developed between these sections and D 615-621, which had at first been designed only for questions concerning neutrality, but which soon included the relations of the nonbelligerent countries, several of which subsequently entered the war. The latter sections, accordingly, were restricted to the literature on the relations of these countries to the war prior to their actual participation.

Again, the literature constituting the diplomatic history of the war is divided between D 505, which contains the sources and documents, the White, Red, and Gray books, etc., and D 610-613, containing treatises and discussions. It was only natural that the treaties of Brest-Litovsk and Bucharest should be classed in close proximity, but when the allies were victorious and the armistice was signed and peace negotiations were begun, it was considered more logical to place these topics at the end of the scheme, where they soon attracted also the material on the territorial questions involved and before long practically everything bearing on the relations of the several countries to the general peace settlement, including, therefore, much inseparably connected literature on the original purposes of the belligerents and their reasons for entering the war.

Reconstruction in its turn was naturally placed last, but only general material is classified here. Political or purely local reconstruction is classified in DA-DU, where in several instances a new number has been assigned immediately following the one representing the domestic history of that particular country during the war, as for instance, DA 578, DH 683. Similarly, economic reconstruction in the United States goes in HC 106.3.

In this connection it may be emphasized that theoretical treatises on a special topic have been consistently classified with the pertinent topic; to illustrate, the principles of international law involved in the war go in JX 1392; the economic situation of Germany in HC 286.2; the floating of European war loans in HJ 8011 and our own liberty bonds in HJ 8117; military medicine in R; and rehabilitation of the disabled in UB 360-365.

And then again, some particularly closely associated subjects have not been classified with the war because of their still closer political and historical relation to antecedent material already provided for elsewhere, as, for example, the Alsace-Lorraine question is in DD 801.A35-57, and the Russian revolution in DK 265, while the literature of others is divided, classified, during the war, with the special country or problem, as, the Lithuanian question in DK 511.L2-26, the Jugoslavic movement in D 465, the Macedonian question in DR 701.M4, and the Ukranian question in DK 508; but, later, in connection with the peace negotiations, in D 651.

PREFACE

With respect to provision for the new political divisions and territorial changes resulting from the war, it may be said that owing, in part, to existing political conditions, no realignment has as yet been undertaken. Material is classified in the main according to prewar conditions, the Czechoslovak Republic, by association, with Bohemia, and Jugoslavia with Serbia; or, in case of an altogether new development, tentatively with special territorial problems, as for instance, Latvia in D 651.L3. The League of Nations, however, is classified in JX 1975 which contains the earlier discussions on international government and interparliamentary union, while special conferences held under its auspices go with the particular subject immediately concerned, as for instance, the International labor conference of 1919 in HD 4813, and the International financial congress of 1920 in HJ 113. In the main there will probably be few changes, owing in part, also, to the vast amount of material involved and the alterations on the printed cards that reclassification entails.

In the preparation of this scheme I have had, of course, the advice and criticism of the Chief Classifier, Mr. Clarence W. Perley.

ALFRED F. W. SCHMIDT,
Classifier in charge.

The 1921 edition of the classification for the European War having been exhausted a new edition is now submitted incorporating the numerous additions which have been found necessary during the past 12 years under the charge, successively, of Dr. Schmidt, Miss Emma A. Runner, and Miss L. Belle Voegelien.

PREFACE

The classification scheme for the Second World War, like that for the First, does not confine itself to the causes and course of the war. It is, in fact, a continuation of the classification of modern history and provides not only for the causes and origins of the war, its course and conduct, but also for the peace negotiations, the treaties and the reconstruction period following it. Insofar as the problems of war and peace during the two war periods correspond, the general pattern of this scheme parallels the one for the First World War. A major deviation from the older pattern is represented by the placing of the diplomatic history of the war ahead of the military history. The logical consideration which prompted this deviation was that diplomatic action is usually antecedent to military operations and forms a background for them.

While in its general structure the scheme follows an established pattern, the details were filled in as the additions to the Library's collections grew. Provision had to be made for new methods of warfare and types of military organization, such as airborne and parachute troops and panzer divisions, and for unique concepts and events, such as the Atlantic Charter, the siege of Leningrad, governments in exile. Books about the war will, obviously, continue to be produced in considerable number for years to come. Conceivably, they may deal with aspects of the war not thus far treated in book form. To the extent that the scheme as it stands (1946) does not provide for them, expansions and revisions of the classification will continue to be introduced and will call for new editions of the scheme. It is believed, however, that in its present state, it is complete and adequate for any foreseeable need.

The unique features of the scheme are the work of those members of the staff who are concerned with the areas covered. The work of integrating the contribution of the individual members and of editing the whole should be credited to Miss L. Belle Voegelien, Editor of Classification Schedules.
